HUMIC ACID

Humic acid is a complex mixture of various acids and is one of the most biochemically active substances found in soil. Humic acid is a by-product of the geological humification process that has been going on for millions of years.

The word "humic" comes from the word "humus", which refers to the organic substances that make up compost, soil and other similar biological substances. Humus is the result of biodegradation of organic matter, primarily decomposed plant residues. Humification occurs when certain organic matter is combined with unique geological conditions such as pressure and temperature. Humates are formed as ancient algae, plants and fruit trees shrink over time to form mineral-rich humic acid, which ultimately brings tremendous benefits to human health.

Humic acid is actually not acidic, but rather very alkaline. This is important because the higher the pH value, the more water-soluble the substance becomes and therefore more bioavailable to the human body.

Humic acid is an extremely powerful substance that has retained organic minerals and trace elements from ancient living organic plants (primarily the Ginkgo tree), fruits and vegetables, as well as ancient seaweed. This is a unique substance that cannot be reproduced chemically, and it is quickly included in the body's work, replenishing the necessary nutrients.

HUMIC ACIDS EFFECT ON THE BODY

Humic acid is loaded with minerals that the human body needs for virtually every aspect of our health. The human body needs minerals for processes such as bone development, heart health, eye health, digestive health, and even mental health. Minerals also work together with other vitamins and enzymes to carry out important chemical reactions in the body.

THE BENEFITS OF HUMIC ACID FOR HUMANS

Humic acid is loaded with essential minerals that our bodies need to keep in shape in the best possible way.

At the cellular level, humic acid does most of its work outside the cell, preventing viruses and toxins from attaching, reducing inflammation, fighting the growth of malignant cells, and more. It helps to process food and fight foreign invading microbes and toxins. Humic acid removes toxins from the intestines before they enter cells, allowing the immune system to function at peak performance.
